AutoCAD's external application programming interface (API) is based on ObjectARX and is divided into the following categories: Writing Plugins Automation Plugins Extensibility Plugins Extension Plugins Other Plugins Extensibility plugins Extension plugins are used for programming AutoCAD for writing and extension plugins for AutoCAD. In the early versions of AutoCAD, extensibility was limited to Visual LISP. Currently, the programming language is AutoLISP, C++, Visual Basic, or C#. AutoLISP AutoLISP is a high-level programming language, which was developed for AutoCAD. It is designed to be as friendly as a modern scripting language, but it offers many of the features of a compiler. As of AutoCAD R2013, the programming language is open source. Visual LISP Visual LISP is an enhanced version of AutoLISP. It was introduced for AutoCAD LT and was available for Autodesk Design Review. C++ C++ is a fully object-oriented programming language. It is strongly recommended for extension plugins. Visual Basic Visual Basic is a Microsoft's programming language for generating Windows, Microsoft Office, Web and other graphical programs. In AutoCAD, Visual Basic is used to build user interfaces, workflows, and extensibility plugins. C# C# is a strongly typed, object-oriented programming language. Like Visual Basic, C# can be used to build user interfaces, workflows, and extensibility plugins. ObjectARX ObjectARX is a C++ class library, which was used as the base for some products such as AutoCAD Architecture and AutoCAD Electrical. Writing Plugins AutoCAD provides a number of programming interfaces that allow developers to create Autodesk-specific plugins. The most common programming interfaces are: AutoLISP (C++, Visual Basic, Visual LISP)

C++ (ObjectARX) AutoCAD Application Programming Interface (API) Most plugins support one or more of the above programming languages. Most autoloaded extension plugins support AutoLISP or Visual LISP. The AutoCAD API, however, is accessible to users via Extension Plugins. On Windows, some ca3bfb1094
